His start in the business world began at the Baptist Sunday School Board in 1951 where he worked as a printing-press operator and advanced his way to bookstore manager all while attending Belmont College and working toward a religious studies degree. In 1961 Bill began a new journey. He took a succession of jobs that prepared him for his ultimate career. He also offered printing for local churches and small businesses. He probably could have hung out a shingle that read "The Doctor Is In." Friends and customers who became friends often dropped in to fellowship or discuss matters that were beyond the scope of everyday chit chat. Matters of the heart. Matters of faith and doubt and concern. Young people and old friends—they all sought out Bill's advice or opinion. And he served them well. Bill retired and closed his book service in 2000. Many friends will remember his "Letters to a Private Church" that he sent them on special holidays. If you would like a PDF of the collection of letters email Connie Powell (potteryg@comcast.net).
